Instead of eating a nutritious lunch each day, Nicole grabs junk food. "Lunch for me is chips, soda, and maybe a chocolate ice-cream taco," the student from California told The New York Times.

U.S. school officials say that students have too much sugar and fat in their diets. The number of overweight children has more than doubled since the early 1970s.

As a result of such concerns, lots of schools have banned junk food. What do you think? Should junk food be banned in school?

YES -- Junk food is especially harmful to growing kids. A recent study showed that half of the calories U.S. children consume come from fat and sugar. A can of soda, for example, contains 10 teaspoons of sugar! Banning junk food from schools and teaching kids to eat right and exercise will help students stay healthy.

No --- Making choices is an important part of learning. Deciding whether to eat junk food is one such decision. Kids should be taught to be responsible and be able to choose what they eat. Junk food may be bad for you, but deciding what to eat is a choice that students must make.
